

Architectural Fathers by Canary Wharf

Father 4 The Limehouse Link The farce of unfulfilment
16 September 1993

Product description:

How does the first member of The British National Party to win a council seat in the Millwall by-election of September 1993, have anything to do with Canary Wharf? It doesn't, you'd probably think. If only things were that simple.

In this latest episode, Canary recounts a difficult period of her adolescence in which she sheds light on her Liberal Democrat foster carer's dark fixation that Derek Beackon - The British National Party candidate who won this marginal Tower Hamlets seat - is actually her biological father.

As if negotiating all the other problems that teenagers face on their journey to adulthood (from school bullies to puberty) weren't enough, Canary's guardian then goes and adds a dose of genealogical hysteria, and this mystifying thing called 'racism', into the mix.

All of which drives Canary Wharf from Buckingham Palace to her wits end. But luckily for her, she doesn't have to travel this bleak and depressing road unprotected, as the Limehouse Link is on the way.

Details:

Illustrated magazine: 36 pages

Dimensions: 148x210mm

Price: £2.50

(front cover)

(back cover)