

Architectural Fathers by Canary Wharf

Father 5 Paul Reichmann The Secret Pocket 14 May 1992

Product description:

Pulled out of her school in Toronto just before her exams, an eighteen-year-old Canary Wharf finds herself in London at the request of her father. Eager to please, she asks no questions as he instructs her in the cold spring of 1992 to go on a surfing holiday, with 'the girls' in Newquay, Cornwall. Armed with a newly bought sewing machine, she goes down to the coast, but once there she struggles to befriend 'the girls', who she is sure that she has never met before, despite her dad and his assistant Steve insisting they go way back. So as 'the girls' go off surfing, Canary goes about her business, assuredly taking her first steps towards the fashion career that would occupy her for the rest of her life.

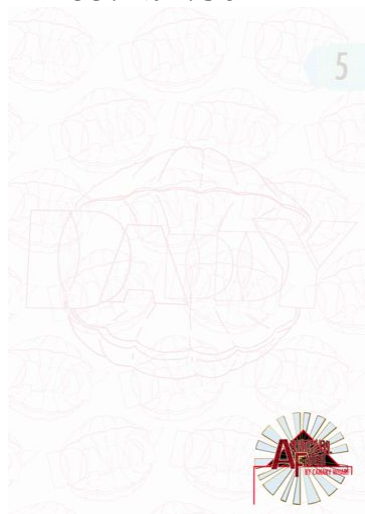

In this fifth volume of Canary's memoirs she recounts in candid detail the creation of her first signature garment, 'The Secret Pocket'. Such an innovative piece should have been a cause for celebration, but Canary learns the hard way how narrow minded people can be about fashion. Reckless borrowing and lending lands Canary in trouble, not only with 'the girls' but also with her father Paul Reichmann whose real estate company Olympia & York, unbeknown to Canary, was having some quite major borrowing problems of it's own, and when integrity is your franchise it turns out the last thing you need is people poking around in your daughter's secret pocket.
